Bones found on river were from prehistoric Native American

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

When a local citizen noticed some bones along the riverfront on August 15, a sheriff's department boat and representatives of the Yolo County Coroner's office responded.

The possibility of foul play had to be considered. The area near County Road 127 and West Sacramento was a possible crime scene. The partial remains had been exposed by low waters.

Several weeks later, investigators don't have a cause of death, but they do have a very rough time frame for when the victim – probably a male – died.

The bones were left behind in prehistoric times, said Gina Moya, Chief Deputy Coroner for Yolo County.

"They were determined to be Native American," she told the News-Ledger. "Probably 3,000-plus years old."

That judgment came with help from the anthropology department at Chico State University.

So what happens next to the partial remains?

"We notified the Native American Heritage Commission," said Moya.

The commission will research the history of the area and repatriate the bones to the appropriate tribe for reburial.

Moya said she wasn't sure whether the remains were of a sole individual, or whether they were part of a Native American burying ground.

"There were ancient burial sites in West Sacramento," she said. "Typically, the Native Americans would bury remains on top of each other, as in a burial mound."

Cyclocross: a West Sac tradition?

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

The inaugural "West Sacramento Cyclocross Grand Prix" on Saturday exceeded its organizers' expectations. They hope to bring the riverfront race back in future years – perhaps even turning it into a fixture on the international cycling calendar.

Organizer Matthew Hargrove downplays his own abilities – he placed 38th in the "single speed bike" category on Saturday – but is bullish on the temporary River Walk Park racecourse site. The designers "cut a diamond out of the park," he said, fashioning a convoluted, roped-off course up and down the grass on the riverfront.

"We think we have the raw material in that park to put this event on the national or international circuit," said Hargrove.

Spectators on the "grand staircase" near the ziggurat building had a great view of most of the action, with Old Sacramento as a backdrop.

Each race lap was 1.7 miles.

The winner in the men's "elite" division, 27-year old Anthony Clark of Massachusetts, managed to complete 11 laps in just under 56 minutes.

Elite women's winner Rachel Lloyd of Fairfax finished eight laps in 43:31, followed closely by one of the event's founders, 35-year old Emily Kachorek of Sacramento.

creating the new event were Kachorek's husband, Pete Knudsen, and Marty Woy of The Bicycle Business, reported Hargrove. West Sacramento's Bryan Miller put in a lot of work in designing its graphics. The Chamber of Commerce also pitched in.

Hargrove said his group had a strategy in creating a West Sacramento cyclocross race at this time of year and at this location. The event came four days ahead of today's "Cross Vegas" competition in Las Vegas.

No DUI arrests from weekend checkpoints, but police arrest some for license issues

West Sacramento's police department has reported back on the results of a pair of checkpoints set up to catch drunk drivers and unlicensed drivers on the weekend of August 30-31.

The checkpoints were set up for about six hours beginning at 7 p.m. each night. They were announced in advance (and announced on the News-Ledger's website at WestSac.com) but the locations were kept secret until they opened.

Lieutenant Tod Sockman of the W.S.P.D. reports that the Saturday checkpoint was at Harbor Boulevard and Duluth Street. A total of 506 vehicles passed through. Four drivers were pulled over for sobriety tests. No one was arrested for driving under the influence, but three were cited for driving without a license and three more for having a suspended license.

The Sunday checkpoint was set up at Sacramento Avenue and Simon Terrace.

A total of 648 vehicles passed through. Two drivers were given field sobriety tests, but neither was arrested for DUI. Three drivers were cited for driving without a license, six for using a suspended license and one person was arrested on a warrant.

Flag display is back

John Vinson's popular flag display in memory of the victims of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks will return today.

The massive memorial will be up through September 14 at the corner of Jefferson Boulevard and South River Road in Southport. Thousands of American flags will again be on display. Vinson, a former West Sacramento resident, assembles the display with a crew of volunteer helpers.

The annual event draws several thousand visitors each year.

Some things never change

From time to time, my father-in-law, who has always been as interested in American history as I am, sends me wonderful books he thinks I might enjoy reading. The latest one was written by a man named S. C. Gwynne and had the lengthy title of "Empire of the Summer Moon — Quanah Parker and the Rise and Fall of the Comanches, the Most Powerful Indian Tribe in American History". And since the last book he sent me was really good (about Kit Carson and the part he played in opening up the American West), I could hardly wait to get started.

I had always thought that the most war-like Indians who had ever inhabited the North American Continent were the Apaches and the Sioux and even the Blackfeet, but according to Gwynne, "It was the legendary fighting ability of the Comanches that determined just how and when the American West opened up. Comanche boys became adept bareback riders by age six and full Comanche braves were considered the best horsemen who ever rode. They were so masterful at war and so skillful with their arrows and lances that they stopped the northern drive of colonial Spain from Mexico, halted the French expansion westward from Louisiana, and for more than four decades, kept ever-increasing numbers of white settlers from invading their tribal lands."

I had heard of Quanah Parker before,

My Back Pages

By Daryl Fisher

and knew that he was considered to be the greatest (and last) chief of the Comanches, but I knew very little about how that all came to pass. It turns out that he was actually the mixed-blood son of Cynthia Ann Parker, a Scots-Irish daughter of pioneer parents who was kidnapped by the Comanches from the Texas frontier in 1836 when she was only 9-years old. Over time, she grew to love her captors and became infamous as the "White Squaw" who refused to return to her relatives until 1860 when she was finally captured by the Texas Rangers and forced to do so. In the meantime, she had taken the Indian name of Naduah and married a much-feared Comanche chief called Peta Nocona, and given him three children, of which Quanah was the oldest son.

The more I read about the Comanches, the more I came to admire them. Their culture was built around the buffalo, which provided just about everything they needed; lots of fresh meat, tipis made of hides, fuel (dried dung), tools made from buffalo bones, bridles and saddles made of the best hides, and even the bowstrings they needed to do their raiding and stealing of horses. They were also always on the move so they did little if any harm to their environment, and when they did stay in one place for very long, they pitched their tipis next to some of the most beautiful streams in the old American West, where by day they could look out on an endless sea of lush green grass, and at night gaze up at more stars than a man could ever hope to count.

And when Comanches felt safe and relaxed, they were "a noisy, jolly, rollicking, mischief-loving people who enjoyed practical jokes, games of chance, and especially singing and dancing."

Anyway, as I was mentioning all this to my 30-something year old daughter and telling her all my favorite parts of the book, she suddenly smiled and said, "So, what are you saying, that you would have liked to have been a Comanche?"

"Yes," I finally admitted. "I mean, they basically had no state, no police, no strict rules of personal behavior, no organized religion, no lying politicians, and they could pretty much come and go as they pleased. In other words, they were some of the last truly free men who ever walked on this earth."

"Dad, they used to scalp people!"

"Well, now it's true that the Comanches used to torture and mutilate some of their enemies, but that was mainly because they wanted to scare people away from their lands. Plus on more than one occasion, the Texas Rangers and the U.S. military wiped out whole villages of Comanches, including all the women and children. So it was a pretty bloody period of American history by all the sides involved."

"So tell me, Dad, what were the Comanche women doing while their men were off having a good time fighting and stealing horses and terrorizing people?"

"Well," I admitted, "the life of a Comanche woman wasn't exactly easy. She was of course in charge of taking care of the children and all the domestic duties, plus she had to put up the wigwams and then take them down when the village moved, and she also had to dress and cook all the meat the warriors brought back, and tan the hides, plant corn, cultivate tobacco, all that kind of stuff, too. But it couldn't have been all that bad of a life if Cynthia Ann Parker spent her every waking moment trying to get back to it after she was rescued and returned to her relatives."

"In other words, you're saying that while the Comanche men were off hunting and fishing and playing war and drinking firewater, their poor women were busy back at home 24/7 raising the kids and doing all the real work?"

"Well," I said reluctantly, "I guess you could look at it that way."

"Some things never really change, do they, Dad?"

doing this race is really to take advantage of our proximity to Las Vegas and to use this perfect site," he told the News-Ledger. "Cross Vegas' is a grass course almost exactly like we have, and it's also a hot dry climate. We hoped to get a some of the pros coming into Cross Vegas, with its humungous prize purse, to come here first and do a tune-up."

That worked pretty well on Saturday, he hoped.

"It was two and a half-times bigger than expected. This year, we hit where we hoped we'd be in year three. This was an awesome event."

Hargrove reports that seven women in the elite field in West Sacramento had the credential of "world tour points" from the cyclocross governing association, as did four of

Letters to the Editor

Trouble in Broderick

(Open letter to Mayor Christopher Cabaldon and the West Sacramento City Council)

I have been a resident of Broderick since before 1968 moving here with my parents and brother after my Father retired from the USAF. I am a graduate of Washington High School.

I subsequently bought a home in the Broderick area in 1983 where being a single parent I wanted my daughter to have a house to grow up in rather than an apartment.

I love my little house but the Broderick area has rapidly gone downhill. I would consider moving to another area but I am a Senior and on a fixed income and it would be difficult for me to leave my home.

I realize that some income levels may be lower in the Broderick area. But there are people such as myself that have worked for many years to support their families and loved ones. I worked at a large Telecommunications Company for forty years.

There are people like myself and others who take pride in their homes. Why should we be penalized for those that don't.

Why don't you and the council members take a ride over to Beardsley and see the house that has trash all the way from the back to the front. You could take a ride down almost any street here and see at least one house in this type of condition.

Why should I have to call Code Enforcement? Don't they see this? What about the Fire Department? The house on Beardsley is definitely a fire hazard.

There are issues going on here that would never be tolerated in Southport or South of the Barge. When we incorporated I hoped we would become one city. But that isn't the case. We're still considered Broderick. Were are our improvements?

Perhaps we should take a hint from the Oak Park Triangle and work on areas other than Southport and South of the Barge.

I have written before this but received no response. I would hope I would receive one now.

Saturday's racing included a novice division, masters and youth racing, and a one-lap kids' race.

Hargrove said that, besides being an amateur cyclocross enthusiast, he had another motive for helping to launch the local "Grand Prix":

"My real motive was to make West Sacramento look awesome on the national cyclocross scene," he said.

PICKS OF THE WEEK

"Neighbors" (R) -- A young couple with a bouncing baby daughter (Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne) lose their suburban serenity when a rowdy fraternity -- led by maniacal, shirtless party-boy Zac Efron -- takes over the house next door. At first, the hip mom and dad try to be cool and party with the frat boys, but then quickly realize that they can't possibly keep up with the non-stop party machine. Logical forms of mediation soon fly out the window, pitting the parents against the partiers in an escalating prank-war.

Rogen fits perfectly into his role, as audiences have seen him transition from shiftless slacker to reformed-but-still-casual adulthood. Byrne is the real surprise in the film, displaying comedic chops not seen since "Bridesmaids." There are flashes of clever humor, but most of the gags are the shock-ing and gross-out kind.

"The Rover" (R) -- Bandits steal a man's car, leaving him stranded in a scorching wasteland. The victim, Eric (Guy Pearce), now has a bandit leader's younger brother (Robert Pattinson) and a plan to get his car back. It's 10 years after the collapse of society, and the Australian outback isn't a good place to wander around ... and an even worse place to make friends.

Director David Michod plays his cards close to the vest. Details about the fall of society are scarce, leaving a lot of that storytelling to the barren setting and the desperation on the faces of the characters. Pattinson delivers a strong performance as a lost, dim-witted young man carrying a lot of loss behind his eyes.

"The Signal" (PG-13) -- Three college kids on a road trip to California receive a message from NO-MAD, a mysterious hacker who challenges them to come find him. Nic, Jonah and Hailey (Brenton Thwaites, Beau Knapp, Olivia Cooke) follow the trail to a dusty corner of Nevada, and then everything changes. The trio is separated, and Nic wakes up in a strange facility where he is interrogated by a dead-pan man in a hazmat suit (Laurence Fishburne). From there, it's a slowly unraveling mystery with science-fiction elements creeping into the picture. The final twists may not be enough for some audiences, but it's an interesting flick for a low-budget, sci-fi headscratcher.

"Very Good Girls" (R) -- The friendship of two teen girls is tested by romantic rivalry when they become interested in the same boy. Lilly (Dakota Fanning) and Gerri (Elizabeth Olsen) are determined to lose their virginity the summer before they start college, but not in an "American Pie" kind of way -- this movie takes the pledge, a

"City of Stairs" by Robert Jackson Bennett (Broadway Books, $15) Reviewed by Ealish Waddell

"City of Stairs" takes place in a fascinating alternate Asia, a world where the mundane and the miraculous have struck an uneasy truce.

For a thousand years, Bulikov was the most powerful city in the world, the center of a vast empire bit more seriously. Enter David (Robert Boyd Holbrook), an ice-cream-vending blond with a knack for photography. A love triangle forms, and feelings get hurt. This drama probably won't feel authentic to younger audiences, and may just bore more mature crowds.

TV RELEASES

shaped and shepherded by its mighty patron gods. Eighty years ago, a catastrophic war destroyed those gods and left the city a broken ruin. The Continent is now ruled by the Saypuri, its former slaves, who in retaliation have sought to outlaw, erase and degrade every possible reminder of the old ways -- sacred objects have been locked away, history is highly censored and even the very mention of the gods is forbidden.

Into the simmering tension comes Shara Thivani, a Saypuri junior ambassador and expert spy. A Saypuri historian has been murdered, ostensibly by resentful citizens incensed by foreigners rifling through the divine history that they themselves are not allowed to touch. But it's soon apparent to Shara that the historian was on the verge of several major discoveries that would shake the foundations of the new world, Saypuri and Continent alike -- beginning with the revelation that the gods may not be gone after all.

The city of Bulikov is a relic of a magical past, where reality itself can change between one step and the next, shaking up the stock set pieces of the typical spy thriller. Political intrigue and historical mystery drive the fast-moving plot, which delves into complex issues of colonialism, jingoism and fanaticism without losing narrative momentum.

Its exploration of cultural identity -- and what happens when that identity is shattered -- echoes thousands of years of our own world history, but also can stand alone as its own masterful creation.

Pick a Pepper

As fall approaches and the days grow shorter, most of the summer crops are winding down. There are a few undaunted vegetables, though, that have flourished through the change in seasons. They've been growing throughout a hot season and waiting until the very end, when temperatures begin to drop a little, to flower. At the end of our seasonal food pageant, peppers take the stage.

The colorful display in the garden and at the markets is enough to inspire the most unimpressed cook. There's green, yellow, orange, red and even chocolate available in the pepper palette. We can't help ourselves; we pick a few up, maybe one of every color, for our culinary experiments.

Peppers belong to an extensive tropical family of the capsicum plant, which is native to Mexico, and Central and South America. The discovery of this wild edible had a huge impact on culinary traditions dating back hundreds of years. From its native land, peppers found their way around the world and are now a distinct element of cuisines everywhere. When Columbus returned to Europe from his journeys, with exotic foods never before seen, it was the fascinating uses for peppers that spread the fastest.

For all their popularity, peppers are perplexing. There are the bell and the chili, there are some that start out sweet, then get a little hotter, and those that are hot, then get even hotter. There are so many varieties that botanists are still counting them. It helps when choosing peppers to understand at least some of the differences.

Sweet peppers are the group that includes the bell, sweet cherry and sweet banana peppers. Most sweet peppers have thick flesh and are suitable for raw or cooked preparations, and they all have their own distinct flavor characteristics. Among the bell peppers alone, the taste will vary from the more pungent green to the very mellow yellow and gold. Hot peppers often are referred to as chili peppers and include the cayenne, jalapeno, hot banana, poblano and Anaheim. Some of these chilies also have thick flesh, and are good for raw as well as cooked preparations. Be aware of the heat scale before deciding on the right pepper for your dish.

Hot and sweet peppers are high in vitamins A, C and B-6, as well as carotenoids and flavonoids, which have been shown to have antioxidant and immune-enhancing benefits. While both sweet and hot peppers are members of the same family, the hot peppers are the ones that actually contain capsicum properties within its fruit. The medicinal and health benefits of capsicum are numerous, ranging from aiding in digestive health to pain treatment.

Peppers are good roasted, stuffed, fried or pickled, served with meats, cheeses or as a complement to other vegetables. Peppers can be the condiment or the main dish, and even sweet peppers will stand out in any dish you add them to. This recipe for Sweet and Hot Pepper Jelly preserves the pepper in a flavorful way while showcasing the best of the season's hot and sweet varieties.

SWEET AND HOT PEPPER JELLY

You can serve this jelly as a glaze on meat or fish, or as an appetizer on crackers with cream cheese.

3/4 cup seeded and finely chopped hot peppers (such as jalapenos, scotch bonnets or habaneros)
1/4 cup seeded and finely chopped sweet peppers (such as bell peppers, sweet cherry or banana peppers)
6 cups cider vinegar
6 cups sugar
6 ounces liquid pectin

1. Combine chiles with vinegar in a large saucepan. Bring to boil over medium-high heat, then reduce heat to medium and simmer for 5 minutes. Remove from heat and strain, setting chiles aside and returning vinegar to pan. Add sugar and pectin.
2. Bring to a boil over medium-high heat and cook for 1 minute. Remove from heat, skim foam and add chiles. Cool in the pan until thick (like honey), about 30 minutes.

3. Stir to evenly distribute chiles, then ladle into 7 sterilized half-pint mason jars. Seal and let stand at room temperature to set, about 1 hour. (Jelly can be stored in refrigerator for 1 month.) Makes 3 1/2 pints.
